FIGURE 7. Schematic representation of the flow of nonturbulent air across a leaf. The arrows indicate the relative speed and direction of air movement. As air moves across a leaf, there is a laminar sublayer (short straight arrows), followed by a turbulent region. The effective boundary layer thickness (δ_{bl}) averages across these regions (Nobel 1983). Copyright by W.H. Freeman and Company. Used with permission.